ALTHOUGH the trade of Wladivostock has never yet attained any notable dimensions, there has always been the chance of the port some day developing into a commercial & centre. The value of the import trade, which in 1888 amounted to 5.978.587 roubles, has been steadily if slowly growing, but the export trade has necessarily been very trifling, and must continue to be so while the population is sparse and the country known as the Ussuri Territory, of which Wladivostock is the chief port, re- as raised the suspicion of the district magis. drew, their Commander, Lieutennat Moritz, being mains almost wholly undeveloped. REVIEW.

Wright's Australian, Indian, China, and Japan Trudg-Directory and Gazetteer for 1803:4. THIS bulky volume—it is thicker than it is broad-is printed in Now York and therefore cannot be expected to be well up to date; but for mercantile and other offices who cannot well supply themselves with local directories for the numerous contatries which it covers the book will be found extremely useful. At a first glance one would say that its chief characteristic is the intense ignorance of geography displayed by the compilers. One section is devoted to " China, Japan, Philippine Islands, South Africa and Brohuangland." Considering that tions are twelve divisions in the book, the mixture in this one is somewhat peculiar. and the sub-division "South Africa and Bechangland" distinctly comical. While we are combined with Bechuannland, the Straits Set-A hawker who mot a young jadesione cutter inorth-westerly squall, and before assistance could | thements are in an entirely separate division, which also contains, India, Burmah, Coylon, Java, Borneo, Sam, &c., to all of which only 76 pages are devoted out of a total of over 3.000. Service staff at the they are perhaps the most valuable of the whole. Turning to China, we find under the heading of "Chinese Empire," Hongkong, Haiphong (Hanoi does not appear to be mentioned) Macao, Saigon, and Vladivostock. Short descriptions and condensed Directories are given for each place. The descriptions of the China ports are mostly taken from and in many cases'reminted word for word from the Chronicle and Directory. The Directory for Saigon, doubtless for other, probably for most places covered by

The book is well arranged and clearly printed, and allowing for id the interests of its currency, it may be the impossibility of bringing a Directory for compelled to adopt. This statement may be excused when it is recollected that the Government gave a free gift of public land to a private trading concern which is competing with other private dairies. During his early connection with the regiment, he said, he had found gambling to be doing the greatest injury to the service, and personally had dictated the terms by which certain officers were to be forced to choose between gambling and retirement from the W'chai Wareh'se Co. army. The officers' club at which high play Watson & Co. A. S.
